What's your experience?

How to deal with a culture shock?

- Actively participate in foreign cultures and get to know locals
- Be aware of your own culture, values and attitudes
- Try to find out, why people are acting as they do
- Try to embrace a different perspective
- Reflect your emotions and actions

‘We don’t see the world as it is, we see it as we are’. (Anais Nin)

German Stereotypes

Germans love rules

Germans love rules, organization, and structure: Germany has an abundance of laws regulating all aspects of life and its people like to obey them.

- Crossing the street as a pedestrian at a red traffic light is often frowned upon, even if no car is coming.
 - Every house has at least four different garbage cans: plastic and metal, paper, organic waste, and general garbage.
 - There is a government office called Ordnungsamt, which literally translates to “office of order.”

German Stereotypes

Germans love rules (Garbage)

Doorstep:

- Metal and plastic, yellow bins
- Paper, green bins
- Organic disposals, brown bins
- Everything else, gray bins
- Furniture, large trash day
- Colours may differ ;-)

Neighbourhood:

- Glass: green, brown and white, and all the rest
 - Clothes and shoes

German Stereotypes

Germans are punctual

- Better to be too early than too late.
- Punctuality is seen as a sign of respect to the person you are meeting.
- On the same line of thought, train and bus schedules are given in exact minutes and yes, people do expect transportation services to be true to their schedule.
- “The German railroad system, which usually runs late, notoriously challenges this stereotype.”

German Stereotypes

Germans are well-insured

➤ Germans are well-insured:

You can insure yourself against almost anything.

Personal liability insurance, household insurance, legal insurance, life insurance, travel insurance, pet insurance, car insurance, bicycle insurance, unemployment insurance, you name it.

German Stereotypes
